

PREPARED FOR THE NEXT CYBER INCIDENT?

Cyber Threats are Real

Global chaos. When cyber attackers unleashed the WannaCry ransomware in May 2017, government agencies and private industry scrambled. Files were frozen and computers rendered useless until the hackers got their payoff. Within a couple of days, more than 200,000 computers were affected in 150 countries. Healthcare, telecommunications companies and other industries were shut out of normal business operations, costing billions in lost revenue.

When your business is financial services, the impact of a cyber attack can be devastating. Are you prepared?

Firewalls aren't Enough

Your team has deployed the most up-to-date protections available. But sometimes that's not enough. New threats emerge daily. Firewalls, updated hardware and employee training are just one side of the protection your organization needs. You also need an up-to-date incident response plan, to ensure quick action when the unexpected happens.

Redstone Consulting Group® Incident Response Planning services will ensure your organization response plan is current and follows the industry's best practices.

Services include:

- ❖ A professional review of your current incident response plan to identify missing, incomplete, and outdated elements, through in-depth discovery sessions with your organization
- ❖ Recommendations to improve the efficiency, speed and compliance of your response plans
- ❖ A cost-effective approach to incident response planning using solution templates that are tailored to meet your specific circumstances

“Ransomware attackers have discovered that they don't have to steal or destroy your data to enrich themselves, they just have to hold it hostage. Our survey data shows that many people are willing to pay to get their data back, which makes such attacks highly profitable.”

– Fen Osler Hampson, distinguished fellow and director of Global Security at CIGI
